

ABSTRACT

A stereotactic device including a frame configured to be mounted onto a nasion of a subject being examined and extending frontally below the eyes of the subject to end positions that are in front of the face of the subject and outside a field of vision of the subject, and at least three fiducial markers mounted on the frame and configured to define a position of the frame with respect to the subject.